

Digital project manager

April 2018

Due to some exciting client wins we are looking for a digital project manager to join us in our central London office. You will be an experienced digital specialist able to provide strategic direction to key accounts through an understanding of client business objectives, customer needs and broader market trends.

This is a client-facing role so we're looking for someone who has the intelligence and experience to cut straight to what's relevant and concisely ask the right questions of both clients and internal resources.

What you'll do

- Work closely with clients, colleagues and external partners to plan and deliver creative and effective solutions.
- Take briefs from clients and identify resource requirements in order to maximise effectiveness of proposal.
- Ensure clients and in-house teams work together fluently and everyone has what they need - when they need it.
- Support business development pitches and presentations.
- Be able to plan and manage projects with tight timescales and budgets – and deliver on both.
- Challenge client briefs to deliver projects that match and exceed expectation.
- Have experience working with CMS platforms and managing multi-disciplinary teams across UX and UI design including front and back-end development. You'll also have excellent knowledge of various digital design approaches.
- Have a great understanding of updating and supporting CMS platforms. We currently work on Sitefinity but are keen to find someone with a breadth of knowledge and experience.
- Have exposure and understanding of ecommerce platforms and best practices.
- Knowledge of Adobe Experience Manager would be a distinct advantage.
- Coding experience is not essential but would be advantageous.

Salary:

Up to £40k – please include salary expectations with your application